When it comes to actual voting information, I find it hard to keep track of this year's primary process. (Yes, I realize this is common in this country. It happens for me in Canada, too.) The same voters who send out their ballots a month before Election Day have been on my mail list for weeks and it takes me some time to separate the wheat from the chaff. Anyway, after a few dozen candidates, I'm still flummoxed by who's who. You'd think there would be a bit more clarity. The information that I've seen most is that Newt Gingrich, who announced he was pulling out of the race a couple of weeks ago, is all but done. I understand why. New Hampshire hasn't been kind to him. On the other hand, Mitt Romney was expected to win in Iowa, but it looks like he's headed for a bruising loss. And Ron Paul is still flying. He came in third in Iowa. He'll probably keep coming up for air in the rest of the primaries. Rick Santorum has done better than expected, and he got the endorsement of former speaker of the house Newt Gingrich. He'll probably keep on trucking until it's clear who's going to be the Republican nominee. So, who's who? Rick Perry Mitt Romney Ron Paul Rick Santorum Newt Gingrich It was Santorum who had support from former speaker of the house Newt Gingrich, whom Mitt Romney trounced in Iowa. Perry is the third choice for a lot of conservative voters. Romney, in a big upset, is the favorite of the party establishment, while

Paul is the only a1d647c40b
