The hope from my end is that the Red Sox land a solid second baseman in the 2013 first-round draft. With no second baseman in my top 12 prospects and the fact that second basemen are a scarce commodity, there aren't many suitors for Kalish. I want to see Josh's replacements in baseball action first. Here is a list of second baseman in the majors and minors this year: Dustin Pedroia (taken in 10th round, Chicago Cubs) Daniel Murphy (taken in 10th round, New York Yankees) Eduardo Nunez (taken in 11th round, New York Yankees) Nick Punto (taken in 12th round, Chicago Cubs) Cody Asche (taken in 11th round, Cleveland Indians) Yunel Escobar (taken in 11th round, Toronto Blue Jays) Brett Lawrie (taken in 10th round, San Diego Padres) The Cubs aren't picking until number 36, so if they really want to see Escobar at the MLB level, he may have to be the Cubs' second-round pick. Lawrie has some MLB experience but may be a platoon of a player. Escobar can play the Gold Glove spot, but he will need time to play at the MLB level. Regardless of how well either of these players do, it makes sense to me to move him up my rankings.
