

Millennials and Generation Z employees in the US, for example, are starting to push the boundaries of wages; an IWPR poll shows they are almost twice as likely to be . While many people complain that millennials don't want to work, they seem to find themselves doing it better than ever before. An IWPR survey shows that the number of people aged 30 to 39 who feel safe to work at full capacity increased by 28% from 2014 to 2016. These numbers are almost double those of their predecessors born in 1990 and 2000. Gen Zers are more productive than their predecessors.
