Q: Can't add database to PlayN service I am trying to add a database to my PlayN service. The problem is that i got an error in the LogCat that says: Database object not found. I tried to add only an empty text file to the bin folder, and i get the error: (You must provide an ID for the database!) But if i create a simple text file and i look in the bin folder, there's a file named mysql-connector-java-5.1.19.jar, and i can run the service by taking this jar file, but the LogCat still says that it can't find a database object. Can i use the mysql connector with this kind of file or not? A: i found that in my case it was enough to install a mysql database and to create a database for playn. i use the official manual for my case. Q: Why does my localhost page report the same HTML when it loads? Using GWT 2.4.0. It seems like: // At the top of my main-page.html file ... // and then further down: would have the same output to (non-GWT) browser. Yet when I view my localhost's page, it clearly does not: // At the top of my main-page.html file ... ... (function() { var inputs = Methodologic rigor in pediatric oncology: lessons learned from a survey. To determine what constitutes "rigorous" methods of conducting treatment studies in pediatric oncology, we surveyed the members of the Pediatric Oncology Branch (Swanstrom, CT) of the National Cancer Institute (NCI) regarding the key features for this type of study. The questionnaire included 10 questions to which respondents responded using a 4-point Likert scale (1 = least rigorous; 4 = most rigorous). The mean score was 3.96 +/- 0.19. The 9 most rigorously-applied features were 1) prospective study design; 2) descriptive analysis only; 3) sample size estimator for group; 4) power calculations; 5) randomization; 6) baseline measurements; 7) standardized treatment protocols; 8) inclusion of at least two control groups; and 9) use of control group for comparison. Responses to each question were compared with those from previous surveys of an adult population (Fisher et al., 1986; Govindan et al., 1997) to determine whether these methodological standards were applicable to pediatric cancer research. Rigorous protocols were highly variable among the responding pediatric oncology studies, and many were consistent with adult cancer research. To validate the use of these standards for pediatric cancer research, this data should be compared with other survey data in pediatric oncology.

Q: Bash - Nested loop with exit Does anyone know of an elegant way to exit a bash script after executing a nested loop? In other words, I have a script that loops through multiple files (one by one) and uses some other functions that also loop on one file at a time. I want to call one of the functions, wait for it to complete and then call another one of the functions but only if the first one is fully completed. Tried using two if statements inside a for loop which is absolutely horrible.

A: There is no elegant way to do this in bash, but you can use a GNU extension using an array:

#!/bin/bash # Two functions
finalIteration() { echo "Loop complete" return }

---

parentLoop() { local result=() # One-at-a-time usage of two functions # Inside a loop we can access it using the # element-based syntax ${array[i]} i=0;
