Movement' initiative Jan 25, 2019 Fitness for Movement have launched a campaign to reduce obesity-related health problems in the UK by 2035 by encouraging people to move more during the day. Eliza King and David Campbell have created a guide to encourage people to move more throughout the day, by encouraging employers, public institutions, local councils and fitness centres to provide support for employees and encourage wellbeing programmes in their gyms. With a report released today, a survey of over 1,500 people found that over three quarters of people said their most unhelpful habit at work was sitting too much, and 78% described their workplace as being unhealthy. Commenting on the launch, Eliza King, CEO of Fitness for Movement said: "We work in a very busy world. With several other demands competing for our attention, we often make the decision to do less in order to get more done, and this is true for our fitness too. "However, physical activity and a healthy lifestyle can bring not just a boost to our mental health but also increase our productivity, create more satisfied employees, cut sickness absence rates and protect against a range of diseases including heart disease, stroke, type 2 diabetes and some cancers. "We need to learn to work smarter not harder, and this is what our initiative 'Fitness for Movement' will help to achieve." The survey findings were based on responses from employees from across the UK, with a particularly high response from those working in the public sector and insurance industries.
