Writing July 2, 2017 So, there have been a couple of changes I've made to my spreadsheet to make it easier for you to view and use. The spreadsheet is now available for you to download. You can print it out and use it in anyway you like, but just for view you can now go to the 'Testimonials' tab, scroll through and see all the podcasts. From there you can click into the players to read more about them, their podcast, the interview and more. Also, the category 'Random Thoughts' has been removed and I have replaced it with a section called 'Lessons Learned'. So, you'll notice I have said a few times on the show notes that I learnt something new, or something I want to reiterate to others. Within the 'Lessons Learned' section you will find the topics that I've learned the most from over time. Just make sure you keep an eye out for more updates, as they are frequently being made. PS. I just got twitter and using it to connect with people who have a passion for podcasting and have approached me about helping them and supporting their podcast. Which is brilliant news! Writing October 21, 2016 Firstly, apologies for the lack of updates lately. I've had a bit of a busy spell recently so I haven't been as up-to-date with the show notes, and I've been focusing on one thing at a time. This weekend however, I've completed my first ever 10 Minute Friday jam and I'm going to share the template with you so you can do it with me. You can find out how to get involved in the #10MinuteFridayJam Facebook group for the 10 Minute Friday template on the side here: The 10 Minute Friday templates can be downloaded here: The 10 Minute Friday jam will be live here on the blog every Friday from 7.30pm (GMT +1) until Friday 3rd of December. So, I hope you'll join me on

Illinoise - Hangul (한글) Used for writing the Korean language A phonetic system to write the Korean language that included consonants and vowels Features include: A block for the Korean language where the sounds were roughly represented by syllables. This was only used for older texts such as hyanggyongjesa, and was very difficult to read. This was replaced by the Hangul alphabet, also know as Hanja. Originated from the Indic script Used in Japan and Vietnam Extended to include additional letters used for Korean words Used for old Korean texts. Early dictionaries such as the Han'guk yuhwa, which was first published in 1601, used this system of writing. This was used for writing the Old Korean language. Developed from the Indic script Still used in some languages in Korea Original glyphs (한글) Still used in Korean phonetics and formal contexts The first series of Hanja or Hangul charactersThe All Blacks have a big mark to live up to after equalling one of the greatest ever comebacks with their victory against New Zealand in the Rugby World Cup final. The haka was a dominant force at Eden Park, not just in the run up to the game, but in the air above the stadium as the gathering crowd cheered on a performance that the crowd, which was made up of 61,000 Kiwis, could describe as a defining moment in rugby history. The All Blacks were nearly non-existent after the break, giving themselves a chance of victory. The second half was arguably the greatest test the Wallabies had faced in a match where it became clear that the home side would roll the All Blacks. One of the great knocks of the Wallabies came in the 14th minute when a set-piece gave the All Blacks a foothold. It was a high kick from Kurtley Beale and Dane Coles, who was deemed unlucky to be penalised, seemed certain to score in the corner. Instead, it was found the ball had bounced over the dead ball line and the score was scored by Augustine Pulu. It took the All Blacks little time to regain their composure, and within the first few minutes they had landed a couple of penalties. The Wallabies edged ahead when Beauden
