What's new in Hue Defense:

for the iPhone 6 and 6s As mentioned in the broadcast, according to cybersecurity firm Proofpoint, the GhostShell Crew, a group of Chinese hackers, compromised a U.S. energy company and obtained images of three iPhones running iOS 10, including a range of iPhones including the iPhone 5s, iPhone 6 and iPhone 6 Plus. The Proofpoint report included iPhone 6 images that had been curated into a hidden part of the Twitter account of the GhostShell Crew, pointing out that the images were created using functionality that only Apple or Samsung developers can access. Since Apple developers can't access the API to accomplish those tasks, it means that the iPhone images all were created directly from the smartphone, implying that the hacking group was definitely in the vicinity of the victims' phones. The claim made by Proofpoint is that the iOS hacker created the three image galleries using a special kind of malware known as a GhostShell app that was installed on the victim's mobile device. If the claim is verified, the GhostShell app would have granted that group direct access to cloud services and other apps the iPhone uses. Unreported to Apple From the Proofpoint report, they wrote: "GhostShell acknowledges its methods and the tools it uses are hard to track and counter. Our report is deeply disturbing because it details a new iOS 10 facility tailored to swiftly bring stolen files into the cloud". Other security firms, such as Lookout, have also been able to confirm that the hackers have access to iCloud accounts. In addition, Lookout's research indicates that the security vulnerabilities in iOS 10 are more severe than earlier versions. There is also a new feature called "Home Share" that lets parents automatically sync videos of kids playing and watch them without their knowledge. The feature reduces the likelihood of a video mistakenly revealing information about a child's private life. In order to save battery life, both powered and non-powered accessories will not show up in the Apple Watch app. iPhones up to 12-hours old will give users two years of warranty in the United States and the UK, while those older than that will get one year of warranty in both countries. As per AppleInsider, Mike Shinoda played an array of different instruments for the songs. The album is scheduled to be released on September 24th, and you can find up-to-date information on its tracklist here. While strong powers, the Bharatiya Janata Party is expected to win around
