PowerPoint and more. The court will decide on Monday if it will start hearing evidence from the plaintiffs, that a government monopoly on maritime navigation must be freed. The file photo shows the Yangtze River from the water's edge in the center to the three main islands of Wuhan, just on the left. The Jinmao 12 case has been widely covered in the Chinese media, where the US claim on the high seas has become a touchstone for patriotism against foreign challenges to the Chinese maritime rights. The case "has been widely reported in both Chinese and international media, with government officials warning against the 'US foreign interference' in China's sovereign territory," the court said in a statement announcing its decision. The prosecution had argued that the US had no right to conduct the military trial since its vessels were not within Chinese waters, and attacked the "Crown's right to nullify the jurisdiction of Chinese law." The US ship itself, the US Navy tugboat, referred to as ATON, was anchored at a distance of 80 kilometers from land. The Chinese government argued that the boundary of the sea falls within the third-adjacent sea to China. The case has become a flashpoint in the dispute over who has a greater claim to the South China Sea. The US says China's sweeping claims are excessive and denies Chinese sovereignty over the waterway. China claims almost all of the South China Sea, and some islands are covered with military installations. Other countries also claim territories. Crossing the line Representatives of the United States and China traded punches in the media on Monday about the court's decision. The Chinese Ministry of Foreign Affairs said in a statement that it "deeply resented" the conduct of the United States in the incident. The statement also warned that "such behavior has crossed a red line and is a significant threat to international maritime security." The court decision, however, was a huge blow to Washington, which has become the most
