Tiny mobile video game studio Jet Labs Studios in collaboration with Zombie Studios released a new game called Tiny Heroes: The Seed of Power. It's a three-part mobile game that pits heroes against the wild forces of nature. Tiny Heroes: The Seed of Power is a tower defense video game. The gameplay is more similar to the early "Tiny Tower" game with a twist. Instead of matching sets of cards with an assortment of items, players are tasked with saving a seed from the base of a plant to gain power in the mobile game. Starting with a seed, players unlock power and weaponry to help turn back the legions of nature. From creating powers to running away from the enemies, players are able to get creative with their approach and strategy. Jet Labs released a new edition of Tiny Heroes: The Seed of Power for free, available worldwide to download from Google Play and Apple's App Store. Tiny Heroes: The Seed of Power is available worldwide to download for free from Google Play and Apple's App Store. What's new:

(The Beginning) "GUNRUNNER" Chapter 1: Greg Buckley and the Dark Ages On a cold and misty morning in January of 1943, Greg Buckley pulled up to the door of his family's modest home in Tennessee. Greg's father, George, would soon retire from his job as an electrician and follow the three other members of his family across the country to the colorful town of Los Angeles. Although George would prefer to remain behind in Tennessee, he agreed to move to California for one reason: his younger son, Greg, was to be the starting quarterback at the university. Greg was born in February 1928 with an intellectual disability. Unable to speak, Greg communicated mostly by mouthing words spelled from the floor of a row of books that lined the walls of his family home. Nonetheless, he and his family were extremely happy. Before he attended college, he was the youngest of five children, and his mother and father, Rose and George Buckley, seemed to genuinely adore their son. Greg was the youngest of their two children (his older brother, Steve, would soon leave for college in nearby Knoxville) and they spent a great deal of time with him and his younger sister, Laura. Greg and his parents vacationed several times a year and Greg was always welcome at their house. He participated in many of his family's hobbies, such as figure skating, music, and cycling. And every summer, to everyone's surprise, Greg came home ready to go to graduate school, his undergraduate degree having been quickly and easily obtained from Eastern Tennessee State University. The entire family was thrilled when in January of 1939, Greg began attending his first year at Ohio State University. Greg had been in pre-med studies at home but he liked science, and college science classes proved to be both more interesting and less challenging than those at home. Though Greg was not considered handsome by other guys, his parents were proud of him. Greg had thick, black hair, dark almond-shaped eyes, and a broad smile that contrasted sharply with his intellectual disability. Some of the boys Greg had met at Ohio State thought Greg was pretty cool and began to walk with him more often, they even began hanging around during Greg's classes to be closer to him. After his sophomore year, he gave a speech at his friends' fraternity, Delta Phi Phi. The speech had been written by one of his classmates,
