Multi-modal training of the human occipito-parietal language network in stroke survivors with aphasia: the role of early MRI lesions. Using multimodal functional MRI and diffusion tensor imaging, we assessed whether abnormalities in gray and white matter and inter-hemispheric asymmetry of the functional networks already existed in the early stage of aphasia, whether these are related to clinical subgroups of mild aphasia, and whether rehabilitation could modify these abnormalities. In 20 chronic patients with mild aphasia and 10 healthy controls, we evaluated inter-hemispheric asymmetry of white matter in the left and right occipital lobe and in the left and right primary motor cortex, the gray matter in the left and right supramarginal gyrus and in the left and right insular cortex, and inter-hemispheric asymmetry of the language network in the left and right inferior frontal gyrus and in the left and right posterior middle temporal gyrus. These scans were obtained before and after a two-week multi-modal rehabilitation program in the subjects with aphasia. In patients, the fronto-parietal language network showed greater functional abnormalities in the right hemisphere, than in controls. The functional abnormalities of the left hemisphere varied between patients, depending on their subgroup. The quantitative analysis of patients with mild aphasia indicated the persistence of language and motor areas of the unaffected hemisphere compared to controls, as well as an incomplete recovery of the language and motor networks involved in hemispatial neglect syndrome. These results suggest that early functional abnormalities in the language network of patients with mild aphasia may be related to the absence of specific neuropsychological manifestations in the subgroups of patients. Patients in the subgroup with hemispatial neglect syndrome, showed a slight improvement of language and motor networks. Day 3 Detroit and we've got a pair of Piston roommates! 1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a traveling device capable of being widely applied to a variety of electronic equipment. 2. Description of the Related Art The related art has been shown in Patent Document 1 (Japanese Patent Laid-Open No. 2003-20148). This document describes “a travelling device that is capable of holding a plurality of electric or electronic components thereon and moving the components". In the specification of this patent document, "electric or electronic component" refers to a component which has a geometric shape and is electrically or electronically connected to other components by a conductive wire or the like. For example, a component may be a circuit component, a terminal used for connecting the circuit component to other components, a wire connected to the terminal, or the like. In the case of a circuit component, the circuit may be an internal circuit, a power source wiring, or the like. The travelling device described in this document comprises a case and a plurality of pairs of advancing/returning sections. The advancing/returning sections are movably arranged within the case. Each of the pairs of advancing/returning sections holds one of the electric or electronic components thereon and is configured such that one of the advancing/returning sections advances/returns toward and away from the other advancing/returning section in unison with the other advancing/returning section. For example, each of the advancing/returning sections is a cylinder. In such a configuration, a pair of cylinders each containing one of the components may be disposed within the case, with each of the cylinders being slidably engaged with the other cylinder. Each of the advancing/returning sections is held by the case. Therefore, when the case is attached to the housing of an electronic equipment, the electric or electronic component may be attached to the advancing/returning sections of the travelling device via the case. Thereafter, when the case is taken out from the housing, the electric or electronic component may be taken out from the case via the advancing/returning sections. As a result, when the electric or electronic component is brought into contact with the housing, the contact between the housing and the electric or electronic component is prevented from being broken and/or from being damaged because the electric or electronic component is attached to the case, rather than to the housing. However, the travelling device of the Patent Document 1 may possibly collide with the components that are present on a surface of the housing of
