FIFA 22 generates a new GK – similarly to FIFA 21 – who will behave different depending on his mental and physical status, becoming emotional, energetic, even super aggressive in some situations. The aim of the series is to put more focus on the players, and further develop the AI technology and physics engine of the game. The gameplay system is now more fleshed out, so it's a lot easier to transfer to new systems when the next iteration is out. The last iteration, FIFA 21, was also very player-focused. Some of the improvements include: Ball Control – the dynamics of the ball have been improved, meaning that balls are now often controlled to a much greater extent than in FIFA 19, providing a very nuanced control of the ball at all times, including up and down the field. – the dynamics of the ball have been improved, meaning that balls are now often controlled to a much greater extent than in FIFA 19, providing a very nuanced control of the ball at all times, including up and down the field. Players will be impacted by the dynamic reaction of the ball while every move on the pitch is analysed in greater detail than ever before. Properties of the ball are now calculated more accurately.

The shoes used by the players were previously treated as rough components, but in FIFA 22, they are now included as part of the player simulation.

Superior Field of View The pitch fills the entire screen in true to life recreation. Hundreds of new animations have been introduced into the animations of the players to show more subtle details of their movements. Full jump heights and air times, for example, have been improved to make your players jump higher and run faster.
