Q: Restrict comments to specific post only I have a Wordpress site with a custom post type called articles. The custom post type has the fields title, content and author. But now I also need comments. A normal comment would work, but I would like to have a separate comment function only for the articles (my custom post type). The custom post type should allow comments, but the comments should only be stored for that specific article. The user can comment and submit a new post, but it should not be stored for that post, but it should only be saved for the post itself. Any help would be greatly appreciated! A: That is very bad idea. Allowing to comment on post by all visitor. I would use registration for comment, let each user create own account, once comment is created I would either delete comment itself or mark comment as spam. If you need to delete comment, then you will also have to delete that user account, so that I would prefer delete only comment and user account together. A: Not sure why not have a single option for comments, but this is how I would do it. // Main query $query = new WP_Query(array ('post_type' => 'your-custom-post-type', 'post_status' => 'publish', 'meta_key' => 'your_custom_meta_key',)); // Loop through results if ($query->have_posts()) : while ($query->have_posts()) : $query->the_post(); // extract additional data you need from post the_content(); // add new comment form comment_form(array('url' => admin_url('admin-post.php'), 'fields' => array('author' => array('id' => $post->post_author), 'message' => preg_replace('/ /m','', $_POST['comment']))), 'comment_status' => 'future',

Imaging cryo-electron microscopy of cells: advancing computational capabilities. The emergence of 3D structural studies of cells by cryo-electron microscopy (cryo-EM) has been a powerful method for obtaining high resolution models of cellular architecture and a driving force in the analysis of cell biology. Given the size scale of cells that are commonly fixed for EM processing, computational methods, such as multi-reference alignment, are vital for the determination of low resolution envelope maps.
