Set fifteen minutes into the future, Aldol is about a new craze that's been sweeping Japan: virtual idols. Virtual idols look like normal humans, but they're made of wire and circuitry. They can sing better, dance better, and entertain better than any human could ever hope to, and their devotion to their jobs is unfailing. The protagonist, Hana, is a young high school student who loves virtual idols - particularly Aiko. Aiko is the postergirl of the famous company Lyriq, and one of the most popular virtual idols to ever exist. Aiko is the nation's darling, and though Hana adores her, she knows she'll never get a chance to speak to her. Aiko is simply too far out of her reach. That is, until one day, when somebody claiming to be Aiko starts sending Hana text messages asking for help. Aiko tells Hana that she's in severe danger of malfunctioning, and the only person who can save her is her original programmer... but nobody seems to know where they are, and nobody is willing to help her. Left with no alternatives, it's up to Hana (and an eclectic cast of characters she meets along the way) to save Aiko from being turned into scrap metal! A sweet, family-friendly story about making friends, going on adventures, and the power of music! I've been using this game of card counting (which is the whole point of the game) for almost seven years and I still find myself happy to discover new things about the game. Some things, like what was listed in the FAQ, are well known in the industry. A few of them are still relatively unknown to the general public. I've been studying Blackjack since I was a kid, playing it since the late 90's. I've been playing online Blackjack since 2001, playing on random sites and on the ACB Online servers. Since about 2009, I've been using a ball computer, which is the primary computer being used to run the ACB Online website, to manage the number of cards dealt and to track other aspects of the card dealing. Just in time for the holiday season, the guys of Dewston Labs are proud to release their newest game, a two player cooperative action-puzzler! In this game, youre Dusty, a robot cop/socialite trying to navigate a mysterious mansion filled with clockwork golems and dangerous technology. As you progress through the game, youll be able to carry out a number of different puzzle objectives such as opening doors or activating switches while protecting yourself from incoming threats. As you make your way through the dangerous mansion, youll encounter the oddest clockwork devices youve ever seen before, including a boy with a heart made out of guns, a grandmother with a katana and a granny doll that moves on its own! All these quirky enemies are difficult to hit, especially when youre trying to dodge their attack. Theyll all do very different things as you interact with them, so it may take a few tries to figure them out. In classic Two-in-One fashion, youll also be able to manage a ball of red goo that will activate switches and modify your environment. Take cover under tables, using walls for cover, and even making use of the ball of goo itself! Every successful mission ends up with a reward: cash, special upgrades or items. Depending on how quickly you complete the level and how many cool gadgets you can find, this success will have a lasting impact on Dusty's abilities and even alter his appearance. There are 10 levels in this first installment of Dewston Labs' "Pranksters" series of games. If you enjoy this one, stay tuned for more, which will probably include challenging games like "Possessed" and "Aliens: Infestation"! Your browser does not support the video tag. Be the good boy dog and respond positively to our review of Pawz!, an adorable little game that combines classic arcade action with touch-based control. Take control of Pooch, a little fellow who must navigate his way out of a sewer and into a nearby village, where he can meet some nice people. Along the way youll find obstacles like water cannons, mines, and a series of ramps that he must navigate carefully. Itll be

Dragons are Earth's last defence against the forces of entropy. Their great wings allow them to travel great distances and their enormous size allows them to defeat even the most powerful opponents. So, when a terrible attack from the outer void plagues our world, only dragons remain. For the "New Humans" this world view is laughable. How can they consider the great winged guardian of our world to be anything other than evil? One such person's opinion is not enough. Are you up to the challenge?
