Please follow the instructions to remove MacOS version 3.9.8 and MacOS. Immunization of mice with the disaccharide component of glycosphingolipids produces long-lived humoral memory. Glycosphingolipids (GSL) are a broad class of membrane-bound glycolipids that exhibit strong immunomodulatory and mitogenic properties. These properties appear to be largely a result of the presence of a C-Gal alpha 1->4GalNAc (GalNAc) residue at the nonreducing terminus of the GSL. In this study, we show that mice immunized with a synthetic GalNAc-containing GSL (HS-2) produce a long-lived memory response and that these mice are protected against a challenge with the bacterial lipopolysaccharide (LPS). When mice were immunized with both HS-2 and LPS, they produced high levels of LPS-specific IgG and IgA. However, a challenge with LPS alone failed to produce LPS-
