But it was the law that got their attention. "What we found was the owners, after they filed their paperwork, just failed to respond to the county clerk's office and just stopped paying their property tax," Musick said. There's nothing in state law that requires one to pay their property tax before filing. Reached by phone, the Walton County property owners who took part in the project said they didn't know their property taxes would be in jeopardy if they didn't eventually pay. "I don't really have any knowledge about it," one said. They said they did know there was some sort of bill due but were unsure of how much and were unsure of when they were supposed to pay. They also said they were confused by the form of the bill sent to them by the county. "I don't think I've ever been billed anything like this," another said. "It was very confusing. It was like a ransom note." They said they planned on contacting the county and trying to figure it out. "We're going to try to resolve it," one said. "We're going to try to figure it out and pay the bill. If we can't, then, well, that's what happens." "We're just following the law," the second said. "We're trying to do what we're supposed to do." In the county-issued statement, the tax collector said property owners need to pay for the current tax year and that the law was clear, even though the written form did not make it clear that they needed to pay by the end of the current year. "We found that the law is quite clear and unambiguous,
