"The city has taken some actions to clear the railroad tracks in the city and have discussed some in the past," Bertman said. "(But) not as the Councilor has previously heard. I'm optimistic that we'll be able to move on this ... I really hope we can, because it is still a very viable, productive project that can help the city. I think it will definitely create good jobs for our area and give us economic development in the city." Councilor John Lester expressed his concerns about the impact of the proposed sale on the former railroad depot at 499 Central St. and the potential for economic development to the city. The entire Central St. area was annexed into the city in 2001, but the tracks remain. At least one train still runs through the city and stops there. "The depot is a keystone building to the city's identity," Lester said. "I don't know what the feasibility is of trying to spend money refurbishing or selling it, but that's one possibility and one question that we have to ask." The railroad was started by three men in 1899 and served businesses in the city. It was taken over by the Northern Pacific railroad and a competitor. City Councilor David Durley noted the same train that runs through the city is being analyzed as a potential passenger train to keep people traveling throughout the region. "(The depot) will continue to be used as a train station unless we refurbish and upgrade it," Bertman said. c6a93da74d
